

Folkhälsomyndigheten

Short bio Karin Tegmark Wisell

Karin Tegmark Wisell is a medical doctor trained in clinical microbiology with a PhD from The Karolinska Institute in infectious biology. As of November 2021, she is the Director General of the Public Health Agency of Sweden. As the former Director of the Microbiology Department of the Agency and assistant State Epidemiologist, she has extensive experience in national leadership within communicable disease control and prevention. During the COVID-19 pandemic, she was responsible for national testing strategies, microbiological and serological surveillance programmes. Prior to the COVID-19 pandemic, her responsibilities and professional engagements involved antibiotic resistance and public health microbiology at the Public Health Agency of Sweden and at the former Swedish Institute for Infectious Disease Control.

The Public Health Agency of Sweden is an expert authority with responsibility for public health issues at a national level. The Agency develops and supports activities to promote health, prevent illness and improve preparedness for health threats.